LAC LA BICHE FIRE BRIGADE SCORES HIGH IN COMPETITION

LAC LA BICHE — The Lac la Biche Volunteer Fire Brigade scored high points in the annual fire fighting competition held at St. Paul on July 14. A total of 16 teams from Edmonton, Westlock, Vegreville, Mundare, St. Paul, Two Hills, the RCAF and Lac la Biche competed in the various phases of fire fighting and equipment handling. Lac la Biche entered two teams under Fire Chief E. C. Dobson. No. 1 team took second place to Westlock in the hose rolling event, being short one-fifth of a second only. Number two team also did well as they placed themselves in third position in hose coupling; Vegreville and Westlock won first and second.

The Lac la Biche four also defeated both Mundare and St. Paul in the water fight.

Many compliments were passed to the local team as they were the only volunteer group in uniform. The men have navy blue battle dress style uniforms purchased from brigade funds.

Next year's annual event will take place in Two Hills, but the men have plans of entering provincial competitions at Calgary sponsored by the Calgary Fire Department.

The Lac la Biche Volunteer Brigade have recently acquired a carbon-dioxide tank, a smoke mask, a five hp siren and several lengths of hose.

A basket social and dance are being considered for August and plans call for a Fire Prevention Week in the fall. Although the

Asel Mackie Victim Of Thugs

LAC LA BICHE—Asel Mackie, a farmer from the Rich Lake district, while walking at night to a friend's home a mile or so out of town, was attacked by thugs, who relieved him of $13.00 and left him unconscious on the lake shore. When he regained consciousness, he was partly submerged in water. Fortunately his head and shoulders were out of the water. He is pretty badly battered about the face and head. No complaint has as yet been made. It is presumed that he was followed from the hotel premises by his attackers, who may have known he had some money.

Investigation is underway and the public are aroused over the fact that such an act could happen to any person in the pursuit of their personal business.

This is an unprovoked, vicious incident, that could have been deliberate murder. We hope the public will co-operate with the police in every way possible with information that will obtain a conviction of these hoodlums.

Think Gas Explosion Caused Ranger's Death

LAC LA BICHE—A gasoline explosion is believed responsible for a fire near this northern Alberta town, which killed Frank M. Pherrill, 60, and destroyed a new cabin and car.

The forest ranger had been building a new home at the site and police said an explosion apparently showered Pherrill with flaming gasoline and he ran out of the house with his clothes ablaze. Tracks indicated he ran around in circles in a panic and then to his car.

Hail Damage May Exceed $1,000,000 In Storms Over Northern Alberta

Violent hail storms which wreaked havoc last week on northern Alberta farms stretched across a 135-mile long path and caused $1,000,000 or more in crop damages.

More than 200 claims reached the Alberta Hail Insurance Board in Calgary in one day, according to J. Glenn Elder, managing director of the board.

Mr. Elder announced that the estimate of acreage damaged has risen to more than 200,000 acres.

There were two separate storms, he added, and they were as violent as any experienced in the northern sections in years.

The first heavy hail was felt around Clive and from there the storm gathered momentum, tearing in a diagonal line through Clive and continuing until it blew itself out at Heinsburg. The storm followed a path five miles wide on its entire course.

The secondary outburst was slightly over 90 miles in length and had its origin at Blackfalds spreading northwards of Lavoy.

Apart from crop damage, farmhouses, barns and buildings were heavily hit by hail and hundreds of windows broken.

Five hundred different types of fine paper are made in Canadian mills.

WESTERN CANADA will have a new source for most lubricating oils by next summer. H. H. Moor, superintendent of Imperial Oil Edmonton refinery, introduces Reeve A. M. Adamson of Strathcona M.D. at sod-turning ceremony for company's new prairie lube oil plant. $14 million installation, first in western Canada and nation's second largest, will produce 70,000 gallons of automotive and industrial oils daily.

Municipal District Reeve Turns First Sod For New $14,000,000 Oil Plant

Construction work began on another new Alberta industry resulting directly from the province's oil development when the first sod for Imperial Oil's new lubricating oil plant was turned at Edmonton Wednesday afternoon. Reeve A. M. Adamson, of Strathcona, the municipal district in which the plant is located, broke the earth on the site of the new $14 million project.

The new lube plant, which is expected to be completed late next summer, will be the first in the west and the second largest in Canada—second only to Imperial's Sarnia plant. It will be fully modern and will incorporate some of the newest lube manufacturing processes. It will produce about 750,000 barrels of high quality automobile and industrial oils a year, or about 70,000 gallons a day.

The finished oils will be prepared for shipment in a modern packaging plant. Packaging equipment will include an automatic machine capable of filling and sealing 400 quart cans per minute.

Mr. Adamson was introduced by H. H. Moor, superintendent of the refinery, who said that the new plant would make Imperial's lubricating oils operation west of the lakehead independent of eastern Canada except for specialized oils which are not in large demand.

Is a Circus Program Bad For Our Town?

By HENRY THOMPSON

A civic organization of any small town has an onerous and thankless task at the best of times. The mayor of Lac la Biche enjoys years of public confidence. A successful and capable businessman is well liked by those who enjoy his acquaintance in casual business relations. A strong faction in the Lac la Biche area made every effort to induce him to accept a nomination for the Social Credit provincial field. He refused.

Recently under the most amazing circumstances, a circus was refused entry into the town and when they had secured location outside town limits, authorities entered in these grounds and closed the show while the circus management was compelled to seek advice from central authorities in Edmonton. At eight o'clock at night the tents were opened and a large crowd filled the seats. We attended the big tent evening schedule and were treated to as fine a program of entertainment, trained animals, a dance feature, acrobatic and trapeze work, as may be found anywhere in a big city.

My only criticism was the dollar and a half fee, but when you consider the people and animals involved, transportation, and the double handicap of bucking a whole town organization to get a site to erect their elaborate equipment, the circus management must have been money out of pocket.

Imperial Oil tank service was refused and Mr. Ody found it necessary to communicate with head office to secure truck servicing. Advance notices of the circus showing were torn down by responsible persons.

Concessions that are the adjunct of every big and little circus, exhibition or country fair, train ride, and a new kind of roller coaster that was plenty fast and furious, cluttered up the ground. Gambling games, where you can risk a penny or a dollar and secure big gains, were on hand. These side shows and concessions are necessary revenue producers, otherwise the big grandstand show would be at a prohibitive price to the small wage earner or the family man with his children of four or six. These small people are the important persons to be considered in these circumstances. It is currently reported that the gambling feature of these chance games was the objectionable phase of this particular circus. The laws of Alberta are as good if not better than any other province with reference to gambling. The little town of Lac la Biche needs waste no effort to assume moral responsibility to our people. The attorney-general's staff of well-trained executives is quite capable and able to handle any situation that sponsors illegal or objectionable matter in public entertainment.

To those people who have a well-established business or have a good salary, these remarks do not apply, but there are people, children and young men and women, and even grown-ups, who have never had an opportunity and may never have a chance except through the advent of the travelling circus to view, with so much good clean enjoyment, the things offered by this show. A lady lost her petticoat in one of the lighter portions of humorous acrobatic stunts, all in the play. Nothing demoralizing in that, I hope. Let the town fathers view a beach swimming, an Edmonton ball room where a sneeze might endanger a lady's whole wardrobe.

Gambling or drinking to excess are bad no doubt, to do so is a man's own personal choice, a close scrutiny at home might disclose business and professional men in our inner circle who risk on a flip of a card, sufficient money to rent the whole circus concession for one day. Plenty of people know that but do not consider it anyone's business but the people concerned who like their entertainment that way.

The people who actually own business or personal property in town should give some consideration to the interests built up by country people who use the town as their purchasing or selling place and have a kindred spirit of ownership in social and entertainment facilities that only a town can supply.

There is bad management when one circus is blocked out, while another circus is given space, a mere matter of three days apart. Either the circus management or the town concession entertainment interests are at fault.

We could do with more circus entertainment at least twice a year, not as at present, twice in the same week.

SELF-FEEDERS POPULAR . . .

Canadian farmers are discovering that efficiency on the farm can be improved by machines but also by other non-mechanical devices. A simple contrivance or device growing in popularity, is the movable self-feeder, such as the fence type illustrated above, used where hay is stored at ground level. This fence feeder slides on runners and as the cows eat into the hay piled behind it they push it ahead, or it can be moved ahead evenly every two or three weeks as the hay is consumed. Cheaply made, often with lumber available on the farm, this feeder keeps the cows out of the hay storage, and avoids the necessity of moving the hay more than six feet.

The feeder should be long enough to allow 12 to 18 inches per animal and so constructed as to prevent cattle from pulling the hay out of the feeder. These feeders are successfully used with long or chopped hay but impractical for baled hay.

More details in this and several other types of feeder arrangements are available in the bulletin (No. 844) "Loose Housing of Dairy Cattle", procurable from Information Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Glenrobin Belle 2H, junior yearling heifer bred by W. L. Robinson of Vermilion, was junior champion and reserve grand female.

Among other championship winners were the Shorthorn entries of Remittall Cattle of Olds which took all three reserve honors on bulls and junior reserve on female summer yearlings.

Let's Pickpocket Flee With Bible

Picking pockets must be plenty perplexing.

A light-fingered lifter at the Edmonton Exhibition swiped something black and square from the pocket of a midway spectator. Though he saw the hand leave his pocket, the victim didn't bother giving chase.

He explained later that it might do the pickpocket some good—it was a small-sized Bible.

Contest On For South Side Sites

EDMONTON (BUP)—The contest between three business organizations for store sites on the north side of Edmonton's Whyte Avenue will run another month.

The city council finance committee has decided to wait until its next meeting — scheduled for August 4th — before recommending a purchaser for the city-owned plot of 7½ acres.

So far the highest bid has been $15,000 an acre.

Mayor William Hawrelak says the month-long postponement will give the three applicants—Canada Safeway, Thompson Food Markets and Westmount Shopping Syndicate—time to "trash out a mutual deal."

Meeting The People Of South America ...

rise, we were aroused; stumbling and slipping we started out, guided only by the feeble light of the guide's lamp. The exhilaration of seeing the dawn revealing the valley far below soon gave way to a tired, dogged struggle to keep up the relentless pace set by our burro. Climbing hour after hour, the peak never seemed to get any closer. What would have been a moment of triumph for a mountain climber, when we reached the pass of this 9,000 foot mountain, was merely a feeling of weary relief for me. Down the opposite side and by late afternoon we reached the village of Calica. With thirst and appetite roused by our long hike, we headed for the nearest restaurant that promised relief from hunger. Mounting the stairs we were startled by the sound of running feet and turning around we saw a group of soldiers converging on us. First with bewilderment and then amusement we watched while they executed a circling manoeuvre like a boy scout troop. Their earnestness gave way to sheepishness as we stood there grinning, awaiting our capture. With the honor accorded to a captured officer, we were escorted to the local military headquarters and presented to the commander. After inspecting our documents he very courteously explained that due to the hostile relations between the two countries it was necessary to check all strangers in order to intercept any attempted sabotage or espionage.

After our unexpected interview could we be — there was a store, and a welcomed meal we made inquiries about transportation. "Sorry, the rains have washed out all roads and you will have to try the next town." The following morning we hired another mule and tried again. Our position was becoming a bit delicate as in these small villages nobody would cash our all important travellers cheques. Their novelty was not at all amusing to us as we had to buy fruit for meals as we were unable to afford food in the local restaurants. Our few remaining Ecuadorian sucres were cautiously preserved for transportation costs. Cusambe offered no relief from our weary trek and we pushed on to Zabolilla the same day. First we complied with military documentation and then asked about travel to the border. "Sorry, the truck left fifteen minutes ago and won't return for three days but if you push on to Zapotilla tonight you will be able to catch a truck in the morning." Taking pity on us, the wife of the local military commander filled us upon orange juice and with this as a stimulus we made a desperate gamble and hired horses to make the ride. Darkness fell, a heavy tropical rain descended, our guide pleaded, begged and threatened to turn back but we were determined to catch that truck. A wooden saddle and one stirrup was all the equipment my "caballo" had and it was six hours later that I pried myself loose from it. I don't know whether it was our similar financial position, the sharing of my last cigarettes, or the oddity of two gringos travelling in this fashion or genuine comradeship but after our gruelling ride he invited us to his humble thatched hut and asked us to share a meal with him. After eating our fill on a delicious meal of rice and yucca roots, he cleared the table and we lay down on it to sleep. Next morning our friend accompanied us to town and after bidding us farewell, pressed five sucres into my pocket and hurried away.

"Sorry, no trucks here," was a phrase that was recurring like a bad dream. Again we heard the familiar words. "But there is one in the next town," but at least we were at the river which formed the border between the two countries. One very kind gentleman loaded our baggage on his burro and free of charge, toted it to a point where a boat ferried passengers across the border. Although the trip only took two hours it was an extremely tiring walk. Huge mounds of lava rock, bare of vegetation and flat expanses of sand reflected the sun mercilessly. Hungry, tired, footsore, we trotted the interminable miles trying to keep up to the jogging burro.

At last! Could it be a mirage? we were there. Our thirst was tremendous and there was a whole river to tempt us. The ferry was a rowboat manipulated by two skillful natives and what should have been soldiers guarding the frontiers were nothing more than peasants crossing the frontier at will to buy and sell produce to their neighbors. After crossing over we shed our clothes and plunged into the cool, refreshing, muddy old river. How lucky too. With our last ten sucres (50 cents) we feasted on two tins of sardines and cookies. The owner, a motherly old dear, brought us jugs of lemonade as fast as we could drink them. It was delicious beyond comparison. The pleasant taste lingered even after she told us the dark color was caused by using water brought directly from the river without giving it a chance to settle.

No truck again, but it was beginning to get routine. We walked a scant few miles out to the road and spent the night sleeping on a bench outside a roadside hut. When we boarded the truck the following morning we both agreed that after walking 65 miles this was a little too unusual "unusual experience."

Protest Loss Of Loyal Edmonton Regiment

EDMONTON (BUP) — Several Edmontonians demanded today that the city council take action when it was learned that the Loyal Edmonton Regiment is to be redesignated under a new militia reorganization plan.

An Ottawa announcement says the Loyal Edmonton Regiment is to be known as the Loyal Edmonton Regiment of the Third Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry.

One of those protesting the change is Colonel F. C. Jamieson, a veteran of the South African, First and Second World Wars. He says the change in name will be a great shock to citizens.

He adds, they are the pride of Edmonton and have given distinguished service in the First and Second World Wars.

The Colonel says "No regiment in Canada has a finer record in those wars." He says that in his opinion the city council should lodge a strong protest to Ottawa over this change.

Alberta, considered Canada's most mobile province, has 10 meter vehicles for every 33 citizens. Next is Ontario was 10 for every 37 souls.

Report From Ecuador

Meeting the People Of South America,
We Avoid Both Rainy Seasons

By KEN MacCRIMMON

My travelling companion, Gerhart Frank and I, have as one of our main purposes, an objective that is very similar to many who visit this land of the equator. It is to know and understand, at least partly, the peoples of this immense continent. The approach varies with the individual and in our case it is accomplished by avoiding the beaten path of "tourists". Sometimes the means of transportation and lodgings in these areas are slightly uncomfortable. However, when you travel for days with a native guide, enjoy his hospitality by sleeping in his hut and eating at his table, it is then you pass the boundary of mere tolerance and enter in the realm of understanding.

The rainy season of Northern Ecuador falls in two separate seasons but travelling south it merges into one. Nearing the arid desert region of northern Peru it begins later and ends sooner, usually lasting from November to May. We have been doubly fortunate in our travels thus far as we have been able to avoid the seasonal torrential tropical rains to a large extent. The cessation of the rains bring the blessings of cool temperate weather and the absence of "Norte-Americanos" whose presence cause the inflationary prices of the summer and mid-winter variation seasons.

Ambato, known as the "Garden City" of the south, was more of a dust bowl as the season rains had failed to deposit their usual 58 inches of precipitation. The well tended gardens and orchards that surrounded practically every home, failed to live up to the guide-book phraseology as the volcanic ash soil coated everything with a desolate grey film. It is a fair day, which is noted throughout Ecuador for variety and immensity, failed to attract us. Swirling clouds of dust stirred up by the milling crowd gave it the appearance of an Arabian bazaar. Our bus arrived there at mid-afternoon but the Sahara-like atmosphere made us to decide to move on without delay.

Chimborazo! At 20,574 feet, certainly not the highest, but, undoubtedly one of the most magnificent in South America. Rising up out of a broad plain it towers majestically — the patriarch of a family of volcanoes circling a tiny village. Usually mountains receive only a casual appreciative glance from passersby, but this seemed to hold a magnetic spell over all. Even the peasants squatting in the centre aisle of our crowded bus, twisted and strained to catch a glimpse of its mist enshrouded, snow capped peak. For hours we like valleys that traverse Ecuador circled its base, finally, descending sharply into one of the 10 basins from North to South, we entered the village of Rio Bamba.

Two very strong factors that govern our purchases, are limited space in our suitcases and the all important "dinero". The latter must be doled-out very cautiously if we wish to return to Canada in our present capacity as tourists and not as deck hands on some tramp steamer. Small towns like Rio Bamba tested our discretion to the utmost in this respect. Market day is an important event in the lives of the natives, both socially and economically. For the tourist it is an eye-filling spectacle and a bargain paradise. Every stall is laden with tempting produce. Panama hats, beautifully woven belts, scarves, blankets, "rebosas" (shawls), all fashioned with care and artistry that is the product of heritage. Tagua is a creamy white nut that, in the hands of skilled native craftsmen, produce intricately beautiful little figurines, bracelets, chess sets and children's toys, like tiny tea sets for girls and spinning tops to delight the boys.

The usual route for tourists travelling south from Rio Bamba to Peru is via Guayaquil. This seaport city is the commercial capital of Ecuador as it is the outlet for the rich tropical lowland coastal area. The "usual" had no appeal to us so we decided to go directly south by the route of the yet uncompleted Pan-American Highway. This had one minor complication besides the lack of travel facilities. Peru and Ecuador had broken off relations and although not at war, had closed their borders. Being "Extranjeros" we received assurance that we would encounter no difficulties in crossing the frontier. Rio Bamba to Cuenca by train — Cuenca to Loja by bus — Loja to Catacochat by station wagon, each phase of the journey becoming a little more rugged, the towns more interestingly native and the scenery more lushly tropical. Finally we reached Limon after a hair-raising ride in the back of a truck which plunged through streams and careened around twisting rocky gorges as if it were a runaway horse that the driver was spurring to madness. We were at the end of the road but after the last ride we were thankful at least to have our fate in our own hands.

Many alternative routes had been proposed to us, so choosing the most direct one we were prepared to make a one day journey by mule to reach vehicular transportation that would carry us to the border. Limon was a tiny village of thatched huts that served as a supply point for towns near the border. Trade was brisk and the subsequent scarcity of pack animals forced us to load our luggage on one beast and follow on foot. Dusk had begun to settle and after a short hike we made our camp at base of the mountain we were cross the following day. We had our first sample of what was to come. A supper of rice, boiled chunks of meat, black coffee and afterwards to bed on boards covered with sacks. Hours before sun-
